THE LOST MINE FOUND.

Samples of Rock Assaying $80,000 to the Ton—Humboldt County, Nev., Contains the Richest Mine in the World—No Fairy Story.

The Alturas New Era, of April 27th, says in 1854 a party of immigrants were wending their way to the Golden State, coming by way of the Noble route, which crossed that 65-mile, trackless way of death, known as the north arm of the Quinn River Desert. There is neither wood, water, nor feed for stock for miles and miles, consequently the weary, half-starved oxen and mules frequently fell by the wayside when reaching this point, death resulting from thirst and hunger. The immigrants frequently turned from the burning sand rock of the valley to the hills, thinking thereby to find water and grass. In a few instances they were successful, but oftener they failed, and from two to three days would elapse before either man or beast would have a drop of water to quench their burning thirst.

The party above mentioned are supposed to have left the valley and gone to the hills in search of water, and while there they found an immensely rich mine. Picking up pieces of the rock they loaded a wagon with them and came on to California, intending to return at some future time and work their discovery. The party divided up in this country somewhere, and one section of the train went to Siskiyou county and the other to Sacramento. The rock was so rich that it was sold for specimens, and the Dreyfogle realized handsomely from their find. After a few years several of the party returned to the place where it was supposed the mine was, but unfortunately they made no landmarks, and years were spent in an unsuccessful search. Finally all hope of finding the mine was given up and further search was abandoned.

Three years ago a son of one of the men who formed a part of the Dreyfogle outfit, conceived an idea that he could find the lost mine, and he picked up his memory and went out there. He searched for two years, spent $5,000, suffered great hardships, and finally resolved to return to civilization, a poorer but wiser man.

Recently, David S. Freed, an old prospector and miner, went to Sacramento and interviewed the gentleman regarding the mine. Dave is an old stage-driver, having been employed by the Idaho Stage Company. He made several trips through the country where the mine was supposed to lay, and he thought, knowing the country so well, that he could find the mine if anybody could, and he made a proposition to the gentleman above alluded to—a well-to-do resident of the capital city—that if he would provide him with a prospecting outfit he would search for the hidden El Dorado, and if found, he (Freed) was to have a third interest.

Freed's proposition was eagerly accepted, the outfit purchased and on the first day of last March started on his lonely search from Reno. Before leaving Sacramento Freed examined carefully a piece of the rock brought to California when the mine was first found, and which is yet in the possession of the defendant. It is as large as a man's head and completely filled with the precious metal. It is a pinkish-colored quartz, as hard as flint, but perfectly free of base metals.

Freed remembered several springs on the desert, where he had watered his horses when he was braving the dangers of Indian bullets as driver of the overland stage, and he directed his course toward these oases. Each in turn found to be dry, and he went to the mountains, leaving the old route entirely. About four weeks ago he observed a pass in the mountains, and he went there, thinking that perhaps it was used by pioneers to cross the ranges, saving a trip around and avoiding the hot, dry sands of the desert. Upon arriving there, he saw unmistakable signs of the pass having been used at some former time for travel. All through it the rocks bore signs of the wear and tear of wagon wheels, while occasionally could be seen, on the lower side of the old road, chuck-holes worn down by the wheels of the emigrant wagons. He searched both entrances to the pass, but nothing remained to show where the teams went up one side or down the other. The washings of the hills had completely filled up the old track. One day while searching for the road, he observed off to the right a little green spot, which he supposed to mark the location of a spring. As he was nearly famished for water, he resolved to go to it. It was in the bottom of a kind of basin, with precipitous sides, and considerable difficulty was encountered in getting his horse down to the little valley. At last success crowned his efforts, and he found a little hole wherein was about sufficient water to quench his own and horse's thirst. After a short rest, he put his horse to graze and proceeded on foot to prospect the country around.

A short distance away he stumbled upon a piece of rock. Examining it, he became at once convinced that it was the same character as the piece he had seen in Sacramento, and he broke it—it was literally filled with gold!

Pursuing his investigation further, he came to a regular and well-defined ledge, one foot wide and easily traced it for a mile and a half. Pieces were broken off here and there, all of which were found to be immensely rich. He made up his mind at once that he had found the long-lost mine, and his joy knew no bounds. He camped at the little seepage hole—he says it cannot be classed as a spring—for several days. One evening, while searching for something which would show that the vicinity had been previously visited by white men, he found, not two feet from the water, an old-fashioned three-bladed pocket knife. This relic satisfied him that the spot was no other than the one where Dreyfogle camped and that the mine was the old bonanza. Acting under instructions from the Sacramento man—whose name Freed refuses to divulge—to immediately return and leave no trace of the mine when found—he started back to Sacramento. One night during the late storm his horse decamped for parts unknown, and the lucky prospector was compelled to foot it to the nearest stage road. While doing so he stepped between two rocks, fell and sprained his ankle, from which accident he is still suffering.

Thursday last he came to this office, and after considerable coaxing he related the above story, and showed us the rock. We don't know how rich the specimens are, but he says that two of them will assay $80,000 to the ton. The others will go as high as $56,000 and the remainder as low down as $800. Another piece, a grayish quartz, contains gold and horn silver, both of which metals are thickly strewn over the entire specimen.

Mr. Freed has forwarded specimens of his "find" to his Sacramento friend, and will await instructions and for his leg to recover before returning. He says for us to advise every one to keep out of that country for the present, that there is no wood and no water nearer than 45 miles to the mine.

If Mr. Freed's discovery is what he claims it is we have little doubt that it will prove the richest mine yet discovered in the world. His specimens are at the Olinger House, where they can be seen by anybody.

The discoverer says that he found five human skeletons in the vicinity of the mine. He thinks they are the remains of men who perished while in search of the Dreyfogle. The only time, Freed says, when it is safe for a man to venture into the Quinn river country is in the winter. Then water is plenty.

A Gambler's Funeral.

Rev. Horatio Stebbins, of the First Unitarian church, San Francisco, conducted the services over the remains of the late William R. Briggs, in accordance, he said, with a promise made to deceased two years ago, and with his wish expressed shortly before his death. He spoke with a kindly candor of the dead, bore testimony to his excellent qualities and to his sincere shame and sorrow as he approached his end, at the character of the profession he had followed. He said with great emphasis that he never counseled any young man to undertake the wretched business, and had tried hard to turn some back from it. "I commit," said the preacher in closing, "his body to the grave and his spirit to the righteous retributions, the tender mercies and the paternal love of God, and can ask nothing better for any of you than on the deathbed to be for all evil done in your life as sincerely repentant as he was." The body was temporarily laid in the vault at the Masonic Cemetery.

Does a Circus Take all the Money Away.

As a knock-down argument against the above we give some figures showing the expenses of Sells Brothers and Barrett's united shows: Expense of hotels, billboards, living, newspaper advertising, licenses, etc., per day average $2,000; railroad transportation $900 daily; salaries to performers, $1,000 per day; salaries to working men, $950 per day; cost of pictorial printing, $750 per day; incidental expenses, $500 per day, making a grand total of over $6,000 that is paid out daily before the owners can see a cent of profit for their investment. Is there a merchant, manufacturer or mining business in the country that stirs up and circulates among the people as big a sum of money that does not clean up more for its owners than a circus?

The public should be more discriminating. To class all circuses alike is as unfair as to class all merchants alike. There is as much difference between shows as there is between individuals. Take, for example, Sells Brothers and Barrett's united shows. They are as superior to other contemporaneous exhibition as Booth and Barrett are to a tramping set of barnstormers; it towers above the average show as the Sierra Nevada range does above a miner's cabin; as the big trees of California above a hazel brush. This monster coalition travels in princely style, employing over a thousand people; its tents cover twelve acres of ground; it requires four big locomotives to haul it, and it would be cheaper to pay $5 to see it than to pay ten cents to see the common, ordinary shows that inflict their presence on a patient and long suffering people every season. Notwithstanding the enormous expense attending such a monster enterprise, the admission is no more than many of the small indifferent shows charge. Barrett's show alone has always been the peer of any of its rivals except Sells Brothers' great show, and both now are united and will exhibit as one at Reno on Tuesday, May 21.

"His pills as thick as hand-grenades flew, And where they fell as certainly they slew," was said of one of those ignorant doctors in the early times, who might well have been called the side-de-camp of death. The sufferer from scrofula, with sores as bad as Job's, need not now curse the day he was born, for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical discovery will restore health and beauty, appetite and strength. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing salt-rheum, tetter, boils, carbuncles, sore eyes, agrefulous sores and swellings, hip-joint disease, white swellings, gottre, or thick neck, and enlarged glands.

Work on the new Pavilion in the Riverside Hotel grounds will be commenced in a few days. It will be 40x125, and have a spring floor. There will be a new swing put up, and some seats placed under the apple trees, so guests will have many conveniences provided for the Summer season.

A Big Contract.

The Verdi Mill Co. has closed another contract with Peck & Lewis, of Sierra Valley, for an additional two million feet of clear and common Sierra Valley lumber. This makes four million feet to come from that section, and will give the Verdi Mill Co. a large quantity to handle, both for market, and for use in its box factory. The lumber will be hauled from the saw mill to Verdi by Mr. Roberts, of Sacramento, who will bring over his big steam road wagons from the Emigrant Gap country. He has contracted to deliver 25,000 feet daily. The road from Verdi to the saw mill will be put in order at an expense of $2,000, and the noise of the steam wagons will be heard in the timbers in that section in about three weeks from this date.

The children are awaiting with pleasurable anticipation the coming of Sells Brothers and Barrett's united shows. The children's dream of fairyland, exemplified with tiny golden chariots representing the gems of fairy lore—Mother Goose, Cinderella, Robinson Crusoe, the Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe, Santa Claus, Little Red Riding Hood, Blue Beard, and the elfin tally ho coach will tickle the children as nothing in the way of a circus parade ever did before. It is said that he who makes two blades of grass grow where but one grew before, is a philanthropist, and we might add that he who makes glad the hearts of all childhood as they have never been before deserves to be crowned high Priest of Fairyland. Sells Brothers and Barrett will be remembered by the children with gratitude and pleasure. Teachers should give the children a recess long enough to see the novel procession. It will make the scholars glad and they will go back to their books with renewed energy. On Tuesday, May 21, at about 10 o'clock, this great spectacular pageant will appear on our streets.

The Von Graef Medical Company, No. 3 Park Row, New York City, in 1888, made seventy-eight per cent. of cures of various diseases of men, chronic and otherwise, within the time allotted for treatment. The record of cures of diseases of women was nearly as large. This is the highest record ever achieved in this country by hospitals or private practice. In the treatment and cure of diseases, science, skill and discovery keep pace with inventions in other directions. The new book lately issued by the Von Graef Company, full of valuable hints and information to young or old, free to all who call for it or order it by mail.

"Brick" Pomeroy, at 234 Broadway, New York City, is now editing and publishing the liveliest and most interesting $1 a year publication ever printed in that city. His famous Saturday Night chapters; his Pen Pictures of London; his descriptions of the "plague places" of New York City, and his vivid chapters of Life Experience in La Crosse during the war, are each worth more than the price of his paper, which bears the significant title of "Advance Thought." Pomeroy is a 55 year old volume of National history, and now he is letting it out red hot.
